Enclosed is a map of the W.C. & A.N. Miller Development of "Spring Meadows" at Route 118 and Route 28 in Darnestown.

Lot # 7 was Pleasant Hills Cemetery. I believe that at one time there was a small Baptist Church on that property.

The late Mr. Tom Kelly, a farmer who owned the property, plowed under the tomb stones! He made a partial list of the deceased interred there.
The list is enclosed.

We believe that the earliest interment occurred in 1848.

The Gazette article enclosed, I believe, shows the daughter(?) of the folks buried in Graves 114 & 115.

I do not have a map of the "layout" of Pleasant Hills Cemetery.

On the opposite side of Route 28, near an auto repair shop, no longer standing, were quite a few graves. A Gazette article enclosed referenced these graves.

Also in this area is the St. Rose Cemetery on Clopper Road and the Presbyterian Cemetery on Darnestown Road.

Wishing you well in this project,

Jo-Ellen Domalski

Grace Ainsworth: 100 years old and living each day to the fullest

by Karen O'Keefe
Special to the Gazette

Perhaps someday, people who didn't know Grace Ainsworth will remember that she lived more than 100 years — throughout parts of the 19th and 21st centuries, and all of the 20th.

However, for the people who know and love Grace Ainsworth, they will talk, not so much how long she lived, as how she lived. They will talk about her right to the point way of saying things, her modesty about her personal achievements, and most definitely, about her sense of humor.

But, today is today, and Ainsworth doesn't give a fig about what was or what will come to pass. She's interested in today and right now. For example, which squirrel is presently gorging himself at the feeder outside her kitchen window.

On Feb. 15, 75 family members and friends helped her celebrate her 100th birthday with a party at the Laytonsville firehouse. She has lived with her daughter, Margaret Bennett in Laytonsville since 1990 after living in Olney for 50 years.

Did she have a good time? Her daughter said she did, with lots of hugs and kisses. Ainsworth seemed to agree, but then she voiced her true opinion, with a bit of exasperation in her tone.

"Oh gosh, all hemlock," Her favorite expression, said her daughter. Enough is enough; let's get on with it.

Ainsworth was born Grace McKenearey Wilson in 1899 in Darnestown, in the middle of a blizzard.

"I refused to go to the hospital to be born," she said with a smile.

She was born eighth and is sole survivor of 14 children born to Sarah "Sally" Ashley and David Franklin Wilson, a farmer. She attended Darnestown Elementary and remembers playing ball in the fields with her siblings more than 90 years ago.

Grace Ainsworth, centenarian

She married Bush Ainsworth in 1922 at the old Grace Methodist Church in Gaithersburg. Their only child, Margaret, was born in 1925 and the family lived in Olney.

"Mother lived in Olney for 50 years," Bennett said.

"Only in Olney," her mother added, clearly enjoying the play on words. "Only in Olney."

Ainsworth said she misses her husband, who died in 1959, very much. Ask a question about him and the slight woman in the big wing chair lights up.

"He was a carpenter, but he could do anything. I don't care what it was. He was worth a million.

"Every time my husband and I went to the store, I liked to go in and mess around. He'd say, 'Go in there and spend some money,'" she recalled with another smile.

"But I didn't spend a lot of money. I always like going to the store, but I don't always have to spend money."

Bennett confirmed this. "Her mother enjoys going for drives and sometimes they go into a store together. "She still likes to fuss about the prices," Bennett said.

Ainsworth doesn't attribute her longevity to diet or physical regimen — or anything. According to her, it just kind of happened.

"Time doesn't stop for me. It just keeps on going," she said.

She added that maybe she's been healthy this long because "I didn't do a lot. I didn't hurt myself over work."

But Bennett said her mother worked a lot. "She always had a garden — of flowers and vegetables — and they ate what they grew. She took care of people in their homes and she was a dressmaker, she had several people she sewed for."

"I made my clothes," Ainsworth admitted. "I didn't like to sew, but I had to do it."

Bennett added with a touch of pride that her mother still has all of her own teeth. Her mother stubbornly refused take any credit for this. "I didn't take care of them, they were just good."

"The first thing she does after a meal is brush her teeth," Bennett said.

As far as diet, Ainsworth favors coffee and sweets. Bennett cooks plenty of fruit and vegetables, and sometimes a little meat — "though she can live without it."

"If she eats, she can have coffee," Bennett said. "Decaf."

"If they don't give the coffee to me, I sneak it," Ainsworth said.

"I take a nap sometimes," she said. "But, I don't like to make it a practice."

And bedtime is, "Between 6 and 10, whenever I feel like it, "I jump up and go to bed."

Today Ainsworth enjoys a little television "if there's anything on that's good" and reading, including her Bible.
